

Her Career, Tiffany's Story

All I want is to help you create your version of a temple. At home, at work, wherever it is your heart resides, I want you to unleash the spirit in your personal space, and uncover the purpose of your soul. Design is in everything and is not about styling for the moment, but about designing for who we are and expressing that in our choices. As an artist, a creative director, a maker, an author, a speaker, a television personality and a podcaster, my goal has always been the same: to be fully myself and help people feel connected to who they are on the inside so we can transform their outside dreams and goals authentically.

For almost 10 years, I worked in fashion and beauty in New York before returning to my Canadian roots. In 2008, I opened up my own art studio Glitter Pie, where I taught children and adults the true magic of making—focusing not on what things were but what they can become! My book with Penguin Random

House titled This Can Be Beautiful displays this passion for transformation, which continues throughout my television career, from my first show on HGTV Canada, Buy IT, Fix IT, Sell IT, to the last five seasons of HGTV Canada's Home To Win and the heartwarming new series Family Home Overhaul, as well as a new show on Food Network Canada. And on my podcast, The Love Jam, which has run for four seasons, I set aside my visual work to seek a transformation of another kind: the emotional aspect of our lives.

Throughout my career, I've been a spiritual insider: a pusher of art and a builder of hearts. From interior design, commercial design, art direction, product design, DIY, installations, writing, painting, speaking, podcasting or styling, my medium is color, and my message is love.

Let's make magic together.
